His speech was received with cheers. He then proconded to denounce an agent by name and was mildly rebuked by the chairman of the meeting.

The "Thunderer" on Parnell. The Times in a leading article this morning summarized Mr. Parnell's argument in his speech yesterday at Galway as meaning that crime and outrage are justified by the determination of the government to keep the peace and refusal of the House of Lords to pass the compensation for disturbance in Ireland bill, and says: "It is impossible to mistake the meaning of such argument or the purpose of the man who uses it. The condition of Ireland and the temper of the men who are criminally misleading the people calls for instant attention.

Light on the Credit Mobilier Business. From the New York Sun, September 28th. Sin: Your questions are entitled to a candid answer. I will set down their substance and give my reply to each one in the order you put them. First. Did I mean in my letter to Mr. Blaine that General Garfield acknowledged the receipt of stock and dividends from Oakes Ames? Unquestionably be agreed to take the stock and did receive dividends upon it. The letter plainly implies that he had not concealed or tried to conceal the fact from me. But his admission was coupled with a statement which showed him to be guiltless.

Second. Did he declare to me that he would go before the Poland committee and testify truly that he had taken the stock? had no previous conversation with him about his testimony before the Poland committee and I did not know what it would be until I heard it delivered. Third. Did I advise and urge him to tell the truth? No, certainly not. Such advice and urgency would have been a most outrageous insult which I could not offer to any gentleman of his character. Fourth. Did he agree to adopt the line of defense suggested to me? You seem to think that I was his counsel. I was not, but as his friend and a believer in his perfect innocence, I was extremely anxious that he should get safely out of his unfortunate business. After it began to be discussed in the newspapers and before the committee was appointed I besought him to make no statement for the public eye which would be inconsistent with what he said to me. Lest he might forget it or miss the important points of it I repeated the substance of it somewhat carefully. He did not reply and I learned soon afterward that he had authorized a total and flat contradiction. Simultaneously the other members of Congress who are impli-

at all or received any dividend upon it. Fifth. Why, according to my understand is worn on fine and costly shoes where the Metal Tip on account of its looks would not be ing of the fact, did Garfield adopt a defense so contrary to that he had agreed on. I have already said he made no statement about it. His reason for abandoning the true ground of his defense was doubtless the necessity he felt himself under of making common cause with his political friends for whom there was no refuge except in a fundamental falsehoood.
